

My name is Nicola Green, I'm a digital designer based in London. I have a passion for digital design. I love to take on new challenges such as responsive and app design, and I'm seeking a role that will allow me to improve my skills in these areas.

I started interning in my second year at university, with placements in companies specialising in print and fashion. In 2011 I got my first job in design as a Junior Production Designer at The Group. I worked on their sites including maintenance and design, prepared presentations, and was elected onto the social committee. It was here that I first started to learn web design.

I joined Design By Structure at the end of the year in 2012 as a digital designer on a year contract. I was working straight away on wire-framing and website design. While at Structure I've collaborated with the senior designer on several large projects and I've also designed a number of sites on my own. On occasion I would do some maintenance in which my experience as a production designer has been very helpful.

Currently I am a Visual and User Experience Designer at Keytree. They specialise in SAP and I've worked on a number of big clients such as Jaguar Land Rover, BP and British Gas. I've done a lot of wire-framing and User Experience design, I've also had the pleasure of creating my own projects and working on them from start to finish. I love to work on responsive sites but have recently started designing more apps. I've created apps for both iOS and Android. I feel that designing for Android is going to be needed more since devices using Android - 5.0 Lollipop look like good competition for the iPhone.

I've also done a few presentations about my work, most recently I did a presentation about my design for the Plan Z website at the SAP UK Business Women's network event.

I enjoy working on projects that will have me thinking outside the box, challenging my design skills. Digital design is constantly changing and some of the projects out there are incredible. I would like the opportunity to prove myself and work my way up in a company. I hope to, one day, become one of the best in the business.
